THURSDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 28.

INTEMPERANCE AND RAILWAY ACCIDENTS. The National Grand Lodge of Locomotive Firemen assembled in St. Louis on the 21st instant, and at the opening proceedings was addressed by the Grand Master, Henry Hoppman, of New York. In the course of his remarks that gentleman said: "I think the question of intemperance is one of the utmost im-portance to us as railroad men. No man of intemperate habits is worthy of the lowest position within the gift of any railroad company. I venture to say that more than half the accidents that occur on the various railroads throughout the world are due to men that habitually use intoxicating drinks." This testimony is of some importance, coming from a prominent member of the one class of men who know more than others can whereof he speaks.

LITERARY AGITATION.—In Josquin Miller's poem of Kit Carson's ride, he begins by representing Kit Carson astride a bare-back, perfectly naked horse. Before he concludes his ride, it is stated by the poet, he "rose in his stirrups" for some purpose or other. How a man on a bare-backed horse could manage to rise in his stirrups is a question which threatens to stirrup quite a controversy,
